King Edward Puts Ban on Powder and Paint for Women

In This Country Practice Is So General That Roosevelt Might Well Stop Advising Mothers and Discourage It.

By Nixola Greelev-Smith.

King Edward of England has anounced that hereafter any young irls appearing at the court drawingoms with "made up" faces will net with the royal displeasure.

The use of cosmetics, once considered the stamp of the unclassed voman, has become so general even among very young girls that if Mr. Roosevelt could stop giving advice o mothers long enough to issue a imilar fiat against the lip stick and the rouge pot, he would do much good, particularly in New York. No healthy young girl needs make p-yet one cannot go to any theatre in New York-or in fact any large a dozen pretty young girls with palpably colored cheeks and lips of impossibly vivid red.

HIDEOUS ON A YOUNG GIRL.

Make-up is generally a mistake for a woman of any age. But on a young girl it is hideously inexcusable. Yet not only do girls in their teens go about with artificial complexions, but one may actually see childrenlittle girls of ten or so-with peroxide hair, though the latter happily are

The lip stick is, however, more popular than the use of rouge. Going down in the cars any morning, even as early as 8 o'clock, one sees pretty girls on their way to work with carmined lips. I once saw a girl not more than twenty years old take out a pocket mirror and a stick of lip rouge in a fashionable restaurant filled with diners and calmly proceed to make up her mouth with only a perfunctory pretense of concealment.

Girls no longer conceal from each other the fact that they use cosmetics. The girl visitor finds powder and rouge on her dressing table as a matter of course, and she and her hostess consult each other as to whether the finished complexion "looks natural."

FALSE HAIR TAKEN FOR GRANTED.

Fifty-even twenty-five years ago-no woman would admit that her complexion or her hair was not her own. Now the use of cosmetics and heads laden down with hair obviously not their own.

"Yes, these are false, and I am going to wear them whether you like it or not," said a young girl to me the other day when my eye fell casually on a mighty array of curls that had not been on her pretty head before. Yet

If cosmetics have a proper function it is to repair the ravages of age. A woman who has lost the freshness of her skin, the color of health in her cheeks, may be pardoned for using artificial aids to beauty. But young girls Justice Dowling that no valid reason had who do so are selling their birthright of freshness and charm. It seems astonishing that the young girls of England, the country which from the investigation away from the Special moist-mildness of its climate produces the most beautiful complexions in the Grand Jury, of which Edward J. Cud-

DECEPTION THAT DOESN'T DECEIVE.

Neither there nor anywhere is a girl in good health improved by making as to defy detection, and the spectacle of young girls with obviously aged cheeks and lips is pitiful.

It is doubtful if even King Edward can accomplish so sweeping a remark the abolition of the use of cosmetics. He is an old and rather easy remarks the abolition of the use of cosmetics. form as the abolition of the use of cosmetics. He is an old and rather easy going monarch without the enthusiasm necessary for so sweeping a crusade. But the same hand that insists on rocking the cradle of the American family—whether the family wants a cradle of not—might undertake the matter with greater hope. And the next message to Congress should embody King Edward's idea.

Mr. Sands admitted he had talked with Mr. Sands admitted he had talked with officers of the navy, including Admiral Schley, in order to gather information to aid in his Russian project, and it was upon his invitation that Admiral Dewey went down the Potomac River to witness a test of the Holland boat.

"When the company broke up its offices here," said Mr. Sands, "it had no money, Mr. Frost said he would like to pay me and that if Congress made an appropriation he would give me a fee equal to $10000 for each of the boats authorized." He told the committee that finally he had to sue for the money and had accepted a compromise of about $5,000.
